Lake Metropolitan Water Department, said water users had been asked to conserve water early in the season, and it had resulted in a 20 percent reduction in use.

Nick Sefakis, director of the Salt

Lake Metropolitan Water District, said he had asked all water purchasers to conserve. He said he was committed to water for good fish management, "but I also am committed to deliver water to people."

Bruce Chestnut, Orem City water manager, said the city will maintain its obligation to provide fishery water. He said the city has had a major conservation campaign and has presented programs to 53 different groups.

Richard Poulson, superintendent of the Deer Creek Project, said he must provide water based on the stockholders' shares, and said the reservoir has not been so low since 1945-46. To lower the flow much below 85 cfs, he noted, would mean an outright conclusion of fishing, since stress and bacteria would kill the fish.

Dave Ovard, manager of the Salt Lake County Water Conservancy District, said all water agencies have made significant financial sacrifices under the fish flow agreement.

Howard Pearson, COWCD water manager, presented charts showing the levels of Strawberry Reservoir and Utah Lake, and said over the next few months, the district will make up the deficit in Utah Lake with water from Strawberry.
